Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon ame from Paris and, though III. ame from Paris and, though III. those later designs which set the fashion tor III. 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Thus his name ""Swas ut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 ""Swas cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 """Swas cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 """ swas cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 """" swas c those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate affects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfecserved an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Par-ma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popular-izer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and per fector rather than the inventor of the 'modern face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Šaluzzo in 1740) came from family. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took char of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first types used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodo-ni's new famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Šaluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand. Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the i editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprentice-ship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in

Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfec-tor rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Pro-paganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of cop-perplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a fa-mily of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a fa-mily of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Re-ale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Four-nier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bod-ori was the popularizer and prefereor ather than the are , thought oni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the "modern" face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Mono-type Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Ti-pografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the ofinfluence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those la ter designs which set the fashion for that imita tion of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was as the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon \mathbf{v} Monolype Corporation in 1921 and is oused upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Pro-paganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamper-ia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma The first fourts of type used by Bodoni came ynonymous. Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularized and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's fa-mous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his speci-men of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imita-tion of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfec-tor rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was sten coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monoand perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern Thecoming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Mono-type Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giam-battista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family batista Boaoni (born al Saluzzo in 1/40) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Pro-paganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and per fector rather than the inventor of the modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an ap-prenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and la-ter took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Four-nier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the into vogue in France.

for that effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the populari-zer and perfector rather than theinventor of the 'modern'face which was coming be half of the Ferdin

Duke of

Parma Th

first founts

is the imi-tation of copp-erplate appeared in the edi tions of the eighteenth on situry. Bodoni s the populari-to of the first

witte

foun

55

otty

pe

, used by

France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo

Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Pro-paganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was write The Manuale Comparison of the rate of the set of the enter set of the set of the set of the rate of the set of the rate of the set o which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the "modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monoty's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of

of type used by Bodoni cam from Paris and, though his speci-men of 1771 shows the influence that o Fournier, his fame rest upon those later designs which set the fashion for which set the fashion for that imitation of copperplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth cen-tury. Bodoni was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inven-tor of the 'modern' face which was then principle perfector and perfector and perfector and perfector rather than the inven-tor of the 'modern' face which was then principle perfector and per coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of Parma. The first founts of type used by Bodoni came from Paris and, though his specimen of 1771 shows the influence of Fournier, his fame rests upon those later designs which set the fashion for that imitation of cop-perplate effects which appeared in the editions of the eighteenth century. Bodoni he nonularizer and negrector rather than the investor of the 'indern' face which was was the popularizer and perfector rather than the inventor of the 'modern' face which was then coming into vogue in France. Series 135 was cut by The Monotype Corporation in 1921 and is based upon one of the many types shown in Bodoni's famous Manuale Tipografico. Giambattista Bodoni (born at Saluzzo in 1740) came from a family of printers. He served an apprenticeship in the press of the Propaganda fide, and later took charge of the Stamperia Reale at Parma on behalf of Ferdinand, Duke of